

Christmas Presents

My name is ..... and I live at home with my ..... and
.....

Soon it will be Christmas Day.

On Christmas Day, my family and friends give each other presents. The presents are wrapped in paper so I don't know what is inside.

This makes it a surprise.

Family and friends give presents because they are kind and want to make others feel happy.

The present might be something I would like or it might be something that I don't really like.

I can open my presents to see what is inside.

I might like what is inside. This will make me happy and I can say thank you. It is polite to say thank you.

I might not like the present inside. This might make me feel disappointed. I should still say thank you. It is polite to say thank you.

Learning to be polite is important so as not to hurt other people's feelings.

Special thanks to our autism expert, Jane Pidduck, for sending us this social story